Wines.*

Our mindful collection brings together our certified organic and biodynamic winemakers. They make wines in a huge variety of styles with a wide range of terroir at their disposal, but what unites them is a respect for their land, people, animals, and the environment. They are committed to putting back what they take out and to leaving the land in a healthier state for future generations.

WHY SHOULD YOU BE LISTING these wines

Because consumers want to drink them!

Sales of organic wines have exploded in the last few years and look set to continue doing so. But it's more than just the 'organic' label. Consumers are increasingly interested in provenance and a good story, which these producers have buckets of!

IN A NUTSHELL

Chemical-free vineyards for happier soil, birds and bees!

Look out for the green dot throughout this booklet...

In the vineyard

Grapes are grown without artificial fertilisers; chemical herbicides, insecticides or pesticides; or genetically-modified products.

In the winery

In 2012 the EU introduced a new labelling term ‘organic wine’ as opposed to ‘wine made from organically grown grapes’. In addition to vineyard practices, this new category also regulates what goes on in the winery. For example, the amount of sulphur dioxide allowed is lower than for ‘conventional’ wines, and additions such as yeast, gelatine and egg white must be organic. It also prohibits things like de-alcoholisation and must concentration.

Certification

Anyone can practice organics, but producers need to be certified in order to label their wines as organic. The rules for certification vary throughout the world, but the process usually involves paying a government-authorised body to carry out regular inspections over a number of years before a certificate can be issued.

Biodynamic

IN A NUTSHELL

Winemaking that puts back in as much as it takes out

In the vineyard

Based on the teachings of Rudolf Steiner, biodynamic farming is the same as organic, but with the added requirement to use biodynamic ‘preparations’ to bring vitality to the soil. Some biodynamic growers use the lunar calendar as a guide when to plant, harvest and carry out certain activities in the winery. The idea is that the force of the moon’s gravity can affect where water and nutrients sit in the vine, and how elements such as lees behave during the winemaking process.

In the winery

Similar to organic wine, there are two tiers of labelling: ‘biodynamic wine’ and ‘wine made from biodynamic grapes’. Again, there are rules limiting the use of certain additives and ways of manipulating the finished wine. The general approach is one of ‘hands-off’ winemaking.

Certification

The main certifying body for biodynamic farming is called Demeter. France has its own, wine-specific, body called Bodyvin. Both have rules governing growing and vinification practices, for example, specifying the maximum amount of copper that can be applied, and stipulating that biodynamic ‘preparations’ must be used.

A close-up, shallow depth-of-field photograph of a field of yellow and orange flowers, likely Gaillardia. The flowers are in various stages of bloom, with some showing vibrant yellow petals and others appearing more as dried, brownish heads. The background is a soft, out-of-focus landscape under a bright, warm sky, suggesting a sunny day. The overall mood is bright and cheerful.

Millton

Two things matter to James and Annie Millton: the quality of their wines and leaving the land in an improved state for future generations. Pioneers of biodynamics in the New World, their Gisborne vineyard was the first to gain certification in New Zealand. In the winery, the process is gentle, with the use of indigenous yeasts, natural fining and fermentation in stainless steel or large oak barrels, all housed in a thermally-clad building to preserve energy.

Battle Of Bosworth

Joch Bosworth argues that he is doing nothing new at his McLaren Vale vineyard. 'A lot of what we do is simply old-fashioned grape growing; essentially, our vineyards are run as they would have been 50 years ago, before synthetic pesticides and fertilizers became available', he says. A pretty little flower called the soursob is Joch's partner in crime to keep down the weeds, and is so important that it features on all Battle of Bosworth's labels.

Chateau Guiraud

In 2011, Chateau Guiraud became the first Grand Cru Classé to be certified organic. Today they are a pioneer of biodiversity, having installed special nesting hives to encourage pollinating insects and spiders – a study in 2010 found 635 species in their vineyards! The wines are classically balanced, with body and texture from the Semillon, and wonderful aromatics and minerality from their Sauvignon Blanc.
